ROOSEVELT'S RINGING WORDS.

There are two sentences in the inaugural address of President Roosevelt that ring out with a sound that will please the public ear.

"We have become a great nation, forced by the fact of its greatness into relations with the other nations of the earth, and we must behave as becomers a people with such responsibilities. Toward all other nations, large and small, our attitude must be one of cordial and sincere friendship."—From inaugural address.

"No weak nation that acts justly and rightly shall ever have cause to fear us, and no strong power shall ever be able to single us out as subject for insolent aggression."—President Roosevelt in his inaugural address.

The last sentence is particularly significant as it tells in a few words what the policy of the Republic should be.

The definition of an honest man by Bob Ingersoll was "A man who fears no one and is feared by none."

There can be no more splendid principle of glory for a nation than to stand in that relation with all the world than one who no weak nation fears and one with whom no nation living dare provoke a quarrel with.

So long as the Republic continues that policy no nation can out rank us in the pursuits of peace or playing the gory game of war.

We shall be regarded as equally handy in driving the plow in the wheat field or driving the enemy in the battle field.

Roosevelt is the President of the whole nation and he has started out well.

Stop Them.

The Southern Pacific railroad people should call a halt on sending people into Tonopah and Goldfield. It is a shame to allure men, with only a few dollars in their pockets, with the expectation of getting work. Stop them at Reno. Only people who have money to prospect with or wish to engage in business should come this way.—Tonopah Bonanza.

Joe Kelly, who has been spending a week in the Goldfield District has returned to this city. He is enthusiastic over the great showing out that way and has caught the gold fever bad.

A fire in the Woods block in this city awakened the residents Sunday. The building occupied by H. P. Jones was damaged while most of the furniture and household belongings were saved.
